Question No:- 59

The eventual goal of science is to provide a single theory that describes the whole universe. However, the approach most scientists actually follow is to separate the problem into two parts. First, there are the laws that tell us how the universe changes with time. (If we know what the universe is like at any one time, these physical laws tell us how it will look at any later time.) Second, there is the question of the initial state of the universe. Some people feel that science should be concerned with only the first part; they regard the question of the initial situation as a matter for metaphysics or religion. They would say that God, being omnipotent, could have started the universe off any way he wanted. That may be so, but in that case he also could have made it develop in a completely arbitrary way. Yet it appears that he chose to make it evolve in a very regular way according to certain laws. It therefore seems equally reasonable to suppose that there are also laws governing the initial state.

Which of the following terms conveys the appropriate meaning of "start of universe"?

Execution

Extension

Evolution

Genesis

Which of the following statements are true about the given passage?

- A. Science ultimately aims to provide a comprehensive theory of the universe.
- B. The scientists have tried to understand the metaphysics of the universe only.
- C. The scientists hold that God, being the omnipotent, would have created the world in a completely arbitrary way.
- D. Since a pattern can be inferred in the way universe changes with time, it can be held that even its origin would also have been regulated.
